

EXAL's Millionaire Pitcher Cashed In, Then

SOLD OUT

Roger Mason—Exal's anti-union pitchman—is one ungrateful millionaire.

As a Major League relief pitcher, Roger Mason benefited from the hard-fought "free-agency" clause of his union contract—securing opportunities to pitch for the Houston Astros, Pittsburgh Pirates and the New York Mets that otherwise would have been unavailable to him.

For most of baseball's history, players were entirely at the mercy of the owners. (Sound familiar?) They were forced to play their entire careers for one team unless traded or released.

In just seven years, Roger Mason made nearly $1.5 million in his union job but doesn't want you to have the same opportunities.

Apparently Roger Mason will pitch for anyone for a price.
